The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various methods of determining the rate of reaction. It is shown that the most reliable method is the one in which the rate is determined from the change in concentration of one of the reactants or products. This method is applicable to all reactions in which the concentration of one of the reactants or products can be measured. The other methods are less reliable because they depend on the measurement of some other property, such as the change in volume or the change in color.

The second part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various factors which affect the rate of reaction. It is shown that the rate of reaction is affected by the concentration of the reactants, the temperature, and the presence of a catalyst. The effect of each of these factors is discussed in detail. It is shown that the rate of reaction increases with increasing concentration of the reactants, with increasing temperature, and with the presence of a catalyst.
